He Never Died

Directed by Jason Krawczyk

He Never Died is a 2015 Canadian/American horror comedy which stars Henry Rollins (Black Flag frontman) as Jack, an immortal man with an appetite for human flesh who has become a recluse to protect himself from others. However when his historic past catches up with him as his forgotten daughter is kidnapped by former criminal associates, Jack must decide if he will continue his hermetic lifestyle or do something to help those in need... or just play bingo. And so, Jack soldiers through this turmoil with a hilariously apathetic attitude played perfectly by Rollins coupled with the dynamic writing and directing of Jason Krawczyk. A charismatic deadpan delivery is what makes this movie special, mixed with the horror and comedy elements played completely straight, setting itself apart from many of its contemporaries who provide an over the top alternative. This great film will provide many unexpected twists and turns that are sure to entertain, just make sure you are not eating meat while watching.

Black Sheep

Directed by Jonathan King

Black Sheep is a 2006 New Zealand comedy horror film; the film follows Henry Oldfield; a man who was severely traumatised by sheep due to his brother, Angus', actions. Henry only returns to his father's old farm once he has passed to find some closure and to give his half of the farm to Angus. While he's there, two environmentalists; Grant and Experience, come across a testing facility that Angus is supposedly funding, and they accidentally release a mutant sheep into the fields, which then proceeds to infect the other sheep, turning them into savage wild animals. Henry and his friend Tucker meet up with Experience and try to find a way off the farm before being eaten by the sheep, or turned into something worse through an infection bite. Black Sheep delivers a ton of random nonsensical violence as seriously as they can with this concept. With decent acting, beautiful cinematography, and plenty of gruesome visuals mixed with incredibly gassy killer sheep, this parody horror flick is one that leaves this flock more red than white.

Secrets in the Hot Spring

Directed by Kuan-Hui Lin

'Secrets in the Hot Spring' is a Taiwanese horror comedy; the film begins with Xiaogin as he starts his first day of term at his third school that year, Xiaogin promptly makes a lasting impression after beating up the school bully and his friends, two other outcasts, Little Princess and Lu Qun, get caught up in the incident and get ruthlessly bullied for the rest of the term because of Xiaogin's actions. Afraid of the bullies during the holidays, Little Princess and Lu Qun follow Xiaogin to his family's hotel, where he was invited by his grandparents to spend the holidays. During their stay the boys realise that not everything is as it seems, not the hotel nor the grandparents. 'Secrets in the Hot Spring' uses slapstick comedy and jump scares to engage the audience, it is a horror comedy that has the audience come for the scares but stay for the budding friendships between the three boys, and the message to never give up on your dreams, which is a fairly heart-warming message for a horror film.
